Singapore, 14 April 2020 – In affirmation of its long-held commitment to build and support resilient communities across Asia, Lendlease is lending support to community relief efforts around COVID-19 with targeted support packages for Singapore, China, Japan and Malaysia.

With established roots in each of these cities in Asia, Lendlease is partnering with local community associations to offer a broad range of immediate, mid- to long-term relief measures and capacity building support for post-pandemic recovery and enhancement of community resilience.

Lendlease's CEO Asia, Mr Tony Lombardo, said, "Lendlease places strong emphasis on our culture of care, focusing on the safety, health and well-being of the people in our communities. In the face of what the World Health Organisation has now declared a pandemic, we are committed to banding together with our community partners to build societal resilience and emerge stronger than ever through these challenging times."

"COVID-19 has affected many on the frontline including selfless healthcare professionals, home care nurses and those in community centers, nursing homes and shelters. This is a trying time for many vulnerable groups impacted and we need to make every effort to expedite their return to a normal daily life. We hope that our initiatives and contributions will offer relief and comfort to those affected, all of which would not be possible without Lendlease's partners within the region."

Dr Maliki Osman, Mayor, South East Community Development Council (CDC), Singapore, commented: "During this global pandemic, people's lives are disrupted in many aspects due to the coronavirus. It is heartening to see business partners such as Lendlease and Junior Chamber International Mandarin (JCI Mandarin Singapore) stepping forward and organise themselves to aid the vulnerable in our community. As the government implement measures to contain the spread of the virus, it is important for everyone to practise good personal hygiene, exercise social responsibility and to look out for one another in the community. At South East CDC, we urge our business partners to extend a helping hand, and I look forward to us winning this battle against the virus together as one united Singapore."

Mr LV Zhao, founder of NPI(恩派), a NGO dedicated to community development in China commented: "We firmly believe that the community plays a significant role in responding to the public health crisis from the COVID-19 outbreak, getting people back to normal life and supporting post-pandemic recovery in the long term. We are working together with various parties to nurture the community spirit through our citizen volunteers, restore public confidence and community relations, enhance community social capital, and accelerate the building of community resilience to better prepare ourselves for any public health crisis in the future."
