Head of Sustainability for the Americas region of Lend Lease, James Stawniczy, vying for the position of “Constructor of Buildings” with the U.S. Green Building Council (USGBC)

New York, 2 October 2013- As the Head of Sustainability for the Americas region of Lend Lease, James Stawniczy, AIA, LEED AP

BD&C, has been nominated to serve as a Board Member for the U.S. Green Building Council (USGBC). James is vying for the position of “Constructor of Buildings.”

James Stawniczy is an Architect by training, Project Manager by trade, and an award winning LEED Accredited Professional. He is a member of the American Institute of Architects, participates on a variety of sustainability groups at the local and national level, and is an author and speaker on sustainable building.

Having worked tirelessly during his professional career to make sure that the construction and real estate industries incorporate holistic sustainable practices, that are focused on respecting our world resources, James’ plan for the future is to create sustainable lifestyles that accelerate fixing mistakes of the past and ensuring the right decisions are made moving forward with design and construction of buildings.

As an educator of the LEED process, an Architect and LEED Accredited Professional, James will ensure the practical components of LEED and overarching sustainability initiatives are upheld with the values and mission of the USGBC.

Please cast your vote and consider supporting James’ bid for the USGBC Board of Directors by visiting www.usgbc.org.

Elections are open October 1st through October 31st.

All individuals who are part of a USGBC member organization are eligible to vote.
