Lendlease Appoints New Business Development Leadership in Boston Construction Business

(Boston, MA, July 19, 2017) Lendlease, one of the world's largest development, property, infrastructure and construction management firms, is pleased to announce the appointment of Emily Reith, as their new Business Development Manager for Lendlease's Boston construction business.

In her new role with Lendlease, Emily will be responsible for identifying and pursuing new business opportunities for the Boston construction business, fostering relationships with new and existing clients in multiple business sectors, and striving to enhance Lendlease's visibility throughout New England.

"Throughout her career Emily has established a successful business record solidified by a reputation for integrity with clients, consultants, subcontractors and end-users," said John Pignataro, Principal-in-Charge, Lendlease. "With her extensive contacts and relationships in Boston, she will play an integral part in leading our business development efforts in New England."

Ms. Reith's background includes commercial real estate project management, development, investment, and consulting. She holds a Bachelor of Science degree in City and Regional Planning from Cornell University and a Master Degree in Real Estate Development from Columbia University.

Prior to joining Lendlease, Emily managed projects as a consultant for varied development portfolios, conducted renovation, expansion and repositioning valuations, and assisted in client development including marketing and strategic planning in the retail, healthcare and hospitality sectors. Additionally, Emily was a senior consultant with Ernst & Young's Real Estate Advisory Group in Boston and an analyst with Spaulding & Slye Colliers in Boston.
